The most observing reporters have examined the roots, and in many cases found them healthy, while the plants are brown. There is good reason for believing that the rea condition, is, therefore, less unpromi sing than it seems. The average sing than it seems. The averages of the condition in States of large production is as follows: New York, 100;

Pennsylvania, 95; Ohio. 70; Kentucky, 80; Indiana, 75; Michigan, 93; Illinois, 80; Missouri, 83; Kansas, 70; California, 62. The average of winter wheat varies little from last year in breadth. The returns indicate an increase of one per cent. Illinois return two per cent increase, Ohio, Michigan, In-diana and Missouri one per cent decrease; California ten per ceut, increase, and a alight decrease appears in the Gulf States. The returns of the quantity of seed used per acre indicate a tendency to thin seeding. Ten years ago about six pecks per acre were used. Now less than five and a half in the winter wheat region. The increasing use of the drill admits of this economy. The aver-age of winter rye is 99 per cent, of last year's hreadth; average condition, 94.
